PROGRAMS
Survival is not enough is a yearly international event started in 2007 in Naples, Italy, in the week of the World Kidney Day in order to discuss the needs of patients with chronic kidney disease and the quality of their machine dependent life charged with many losses and various dependencies. Kidney patients and their associations, philosophers, economists, nephrologists, bioethicists, and health-care managers are invited to discuss about the possibility to grant the best cures and care without reducing the quality and the quantity of the services the patients need.

Various quests have arisen: 1. A new cadre of managers capable of keeping health accounts in balance without cutting expenditure but by reducing waste of resources; 2. the promotion of prevention as the only measure capable in the long run to reduce costs; 3. the promotion of clinical and translational research.

The changes occurring in the health system should be viewed as a window of opportunity, including the advent of the medical-industrial complex firstly described in 1980 and now spreading world-wide.

Many CKD patients are old. As pointed out by Luc Montagnier, Nobel laureate for medicine, “the impact of chronic disease in association with the prolonged lifespan is unaffordable for health systems. Governments react by limiting the quality and the quantity of services offered to the citizens, rarely they are able to reduce the wastage of resources or to provide rational interventions. In the long run there is only one way left for the society and for the individuals, that is to act on the causes of diseases and through a policy of prevention. We need a personalized integrative medicine which at the very beginning will be more expensive of any therapy but in the long run will grant social prevention and maintain the accounts in order”. The main reason which limits the development of preventive care is political. In fact within 24 months it is possible to plan and make it working a new division with all modern and sophisticated equipments, but prevention acts after decades and managers’ life span is short.

Without basic research everything collapses, there will be no money available even for humanistic research, however without a well developed clinical research very little of the mammoth of biomedicine falls on patients’ needs. Promoting translational research would help clinical scientists to make full use of basic discoveries and turning them into drugs. As a matter of fact in recent years the number of new drugs decreased worldwide. It has been written that scientists call “valley of death” the time between a basic discovery and its availability to the public as drug, basic research for which tax payers have given their contribution and therefore should not be asked again to pay.

“If we really want to transform the quality and safety of health care” – as Fiona Godlee wrote – “we can’t just do more of what we do now. Even doing it more efficiently won’t be enough. We have to do different things and we have to do things differently. Put the patients at the centre of things. Clinicians should stand in patients’ shoes and seeing things through their eyes. Let the system fit the patient. Focus on patient. Teach humanism. Let humanities interface nursing and medicine”.
